POWER AND CONTROL WHEEL

Physical and sexual assaults, or threats to commit them, are the most apparent forms of domestic violence and are usually the actions that allow others to become aware of the problem. However, regular use of other abusive behaviors by the batterer, when reinforced by one or more acts of physical violence, make up a larger system of abuse. Although physical assaults may occur only once or occasionally, they instill threat of future violent attacks and allow the abuser to take control of the woman's life and circumstances.

The Power & Control diagram is a particularly helpful tool in understanding the overall pattern of abusive and violent behaviors, which are used by a batterer to establish and maintain control over his partner. Very often, one or more violent incidents are accompanied by an array of these other types of abuse. They are less easily identified, yet firmly establish a pattern of intimidation and control in the relationship.

COMMUNITY-BASED ADVOCATES

TOOLKIT

How to make sure your clients have safe housing

A Resource Guide for Professionals
Helping Domestic Violence Survivors in the District of Columbia

Published by the District Alliance for Safe Housing
Revised September 2015

How to make sure your clients have safe housing

This Advocate Toolkit can answer your questions

Survivors of domestic violence have housing rights under local and federal laws. These rights are meant to ensure that survivors have access to shelter or housing and can live safely in their homes or their current housing situation. Survivors have rights if they want to stay in their apartment, move out, or find a place to live — be it a shelter, apartment or house.

In developing this Toolkit, we looked at the most common questions asked by domestic violence and homeless shelter advocates like you and at the most common scenarios you face in the District. While we cannot cover every situation, we did our best to give you the kind of information you need to feel empowered to do your job.

Federal and local laws provide protections and remedies to survivors of domestic violence. As an advocate, your role is to provide information and resources to survivors. This Toolkit has the information you need to help you understand the basic housing rights of domestic violence survivors and gives you information to help survivors get help.

If you don't find what you need in this Toolkit or want more information about safe housing resources and protections, please contact:

Understanding the Protections

Common Scenarios: Shelter or Housing Programs

As an advocate, one of the most important things for you to know is that survivors of domestic violence have rights. Here are a few of the common situations advocates have shared. Although every scenario is different, they have common themes and provide a basic understanding of what all advocates need to know and what protections survivors have.

① Can This Survivor Move into a Shelter?

Scenario 1

We received a call at our shelter from a woman to see if we had space. She said she was a victim before I even asked. I asked her if she had a protection order, six months of counseling and was no longer with the batterer, and she said no. I told her we couldn't take her, even though we have space. I thought she had to do these things prior to getting shelter since she's a victim.

Answer: The survivor has the right to shelter even if she does not have a protection order, police report, counseling, or other things. A shelter cannot ask a survivor to do something they don't ask others seeking shelter to do. This means if the shelter has a space, the survivor should not be denied shelter.

Scenario 2

We had space in our shelter and accepted a referral from a domestic violence program for a victim seeking shelter. But when she got here, she had a guide dog. We don't allow pets, so I told her that we couldn't take her now.

Answer: The survivor has the right to shelter and has the right to keep her guide dog with her. Guide dogs are not considered pets when someone has a disability.

① Can This Survivor Move into a Shelter?

Scenario 3

I am an intake counselor for our shelter, and someone called seeking shelter. I went through our intake form and asked for the person's name. When she told me, it sounded very familiar. I remembered having a conversation with a program participant a few months ago and remembered the participant saying this woman was trouble, with an abusive girlfriend and drama in her life. When this came back to me, I told her we couldn't take her.

Answer: The survivor has the right to shelter. A shelter cannot deny shelter to someone because they believe that person may be a victim (real or perceived).

Scenario 4

We had space in our shelter and accepted a referral from the community for a domestic violence victim seeking shelter. But when she got here, she had a cat. We don't allow pets so I told her that we could not accept her anymore.

Answer: The survivor has the right to shelter. A shelter should not deny shelter to someone who they would have otherwise accepted because they have a pet. Although a cat is not considered a service animal and the shelter does not need to accept the cat, the victim should be informed that she cannot have a pet in the shelter program so she can make alternate arrangements for the pet and keep her shelter placement. There are Safe Haven programs that will provide temporary care for pets, if the survivor has no alternative (see Community and Referral Resources page 33)

❶ Does This Survivor Need to Leave?

Scenario 1

We have a scattered site transitional housing program. One of the participants came to me during our regular case management session and told me that he heard from a friend that his ex-boyfriend knows where he lives. I told him that he needed to leave the program immediately.

Answer: The survivor has a right to stay. Just because a survivor shares that his abuser knows where he lives does not mean the program has the right to kick him out if he wants to stay.

Scenario 2

During the intake process for my shelter program, the staff person asked if the person was a victim of domestic violence. The person did not share whether she was or not. During a case management session, I found out that the person was a victim. I told her she couldn't stay any longer because she lied during intake.

Answer: The survivor has a right to stay because she can disclose (or not) her status as a victim, and a shelter does not have the right to make her leave because of that. Additionally, victims are considered homeless under federal law. If she got into your program, she was likely considered homeless under another criterion. So she didn't have to disclose her status, anyway.

Scenario 3

We have a scattered site housing program. During one of our scheduled meetings my client disclosed that her abuser contacted her via email to say that he knew where she was and he was coming to get her. The abuser lives in another country. I advised my client to begin searching for a new home, in a new city, because she could no longer stay in the program.

Answer: The survivor has a right to stay. Just because a survivor shares that her abuser knows where she lives does not mean the program has the right to kick her out if she wants to stay.

① Do We Need to Make Repairs?

Scenario 1

One of our program participants complained that her faucet was leaking several weeks ago. My friend, a case manager, told me that this person is dramatic and has shared stuff about her husband who beat her. I couldn't believe she was still married. She will probably go back to this guy. I decided that it's not a priority to have her faucet fixed because she would have left anyway.

Answer: The survivor has the right to be treated like other program participants, which includes having a faucet fixed, regardless of staff opinion.

Understanding the Protections

Common Scenarios: Rented or Owned Apartments/ Houses

(includes public housing, Section 8 housing, subsidized housing)

i Survivor Wants to Stay in Housing But...

Scenario 1

A survivor wants to stay in her apartment with her kids, but her husband —who calls her names and has even hit her — is on the lease.

Answer: The survivor has the right to notify her housing manager, stay in the apartment, and get her locks changed. If this is Section 8 or public housing, the survivor also has the right to request a lease bifurcation (have her husband removed from the lease).

Scenario 2

A survivors' boyfriend lives with her. A few weeks ago, she called the police because he punched her. The other day he attacked her again, and she called the police. The landlord came over to the apartment and told the survivor if she called the police again she was going to get kicked out.

Answer: The survivor has the right to call the police or other emergency assistance without being threatened with eviction or getting evicted.

Scenario 3

A survivor is scared because she lives on the first floor and she worries that the abuser will break in and hurt her. She asked the landlord to put in bars, but was refused.

Answer: The survivor has the right to improved security if she feels her safety is at risk. The landlord cannot refuse security improvements based on her status as a survivor; however, the landlord can request that the survivor pay for the security improvements.

① Survivor Wants to Stay in Housing But...

Scenario 4

A survivor received an eviction notice from her landlord because the police were called to her apartment after her boyfriend attacked her. She always paid her rent on time and the only issues she ever had were caused by her abusive boyfriend.

Answer: The survivor has the right to stay in the apartment if the Landlord Tenant Court judge makes a determination that domestic violence is the reason for the eviction. If the survivor received a protection order because of the domestic violence incident, the judge should not evict the survivor. If the survivor filed for a protection order, asked for the abuser to be removed from the apartment and provides a police report (within 60 days), but has not received the protection order yet, the Landlord Tenant Court judge has the option of not evicting the survivor.

① Survivor Needs to Keep Someone Out of the Housing, But ...

Scenario 1

A survivor has a protection order against her girlfriend, but the landlord lets her into the house the survivor rents because the girlfriend is still on the lease.

Answer: The survivor has the right to ask the housing manager to change the locks, and the housing manager or landlord must do so within five business days. The landlord can ask the survivor to pay for the lock change, and she has up to 45 day to pay. The landlord cannot charge the survivor more than any other tenant.

Scenario 2

The survivor is scared of his boyfriend. The boyfriend has copies of the key to his apartment (but he's not on the lease) and lets himself in.

Answer: The survivor has the right to ask the housing manager to change the locks, and the housing manager or landlord must do so within five business days. Because the survivor's boyfriend is not on the lease, no protection order is necessary to have the locks changed. The landlord can ask the survivor to pay for the lock change, and he has up to 45 day to pay. The landlord cannot charge the survivor more than any other tenant. If this is public housing or Section 8, the survivor has the right to request an emergency transfer.

① Survivor Needs to Keep Someone Out of the Housing, But ...

Scenario 3

The survivor lives in a Section 8 unit and is scared of her partner. The survivor wants to get her partner out of the unit.

Answer: The survivor has the right to ask the housing manager to remove the partner from the unit, including the lease. The survivor also has the right to request an emergency transfer. If the voucher is in her partner's name, the survivor can request to have the voucher placed in her name if she qualifies for Section 8.

① Survivor Wants to Leave, But...

Scenario 1

The survivor is scared for her safety but has eight months left on her one-year lease.

Answer: The survivor has the right to contact her housing manager and leave the apartment within 14 days of giving notice. The survivor is only responsible for 14 days of the rent. The survivor will need to provide her housing manager with either a copy of a protection order or a letter from a qualified third party (domestic violence counselor, health professional, police officer, sworn officer of the D.C. Housing Authority Office of Public Safety).

① Survivor Needs a Place to Live, But...

Scenario 1

A survivor is looking for an apartment, submits an application but gets rejected. She says she overheard that one of the people who lives in that same apartment complex told the manager the survivor's boyfriend beat her up and that's why she didn't get the apartment.

Answer: The survivor has the right to not be discriminated against. The housing manager cannot deny an applicant an apartment because she is (or is perceived to be) a survivor.

Overview: Federal and Local Housing Protections for Survivors of Domestic Violence

District of Columbia Law

Human Rights Act

The Human Rights Act of 1977, amended March 2007, provides extensive protections to survivors in public and private housing. This includes homeless shelters, domestic violence shelters, privately owned apartments/houses, public housing, Section 8 housing, and subsidized housing.

Survivors have the right to:

- be treated the same as other tenants or housing program participants;
- be protected from discrimination when seeking (or while in) public or private housing;
- have the locks changed;
- reasonable accommodation in restoring or improving security and safety measures;
- be released from a lease early without penalty;
- stay in her/his home without threat of eviction if they experience domestic violence in their residence; and
- stay in his/her home without threat of eviction if they contact the police or emergency services during or after a domestic violence incident.

Rental Housing Act

The Rental Housing Act of 1985, amended March 2007, provides survivors with protection from eviction and a release from certain lease obligations if the survivors safety is in jeopardy.

Survivors have the right to:

- have the locks changed;
- be released from a lease early free of penalty within 14 days of giving notice;
- stay in her/his home without threat of eviction if they experience domestic violence in their residence; and
- stay in his/her home without threat of eviction if they contact the police or emergency services during or after a domestic violence incident.

Federal Laws

Violence Against Women Act

Under the Violence Against Women Act (2013) someone who is a survivor of domestic violence and a tenant in federal public housing, Section 8 voucher- or project-based housing, or in a program that receives McKinney-Vento funds (includes Continuum of Care (except safe havens)¹ is entitled to certain protections. VAWA applies to survivors regardless of sex, gender identity, sexual orientation, disability or age. It also provides housing protection to survivors of dating violence, sexual assault, stalking and also applies to an affiliated individual of the survivor (including individuals who are not on the lease but are in the survivor's immediate family or individual living in the household).

Survivors have the right to:

- be accepted into a shelter/housing program. For example, a housing provider cannot deny an applicant housing/assistance on the basis that s/he is or has been a survivor;
- remove the batterer from the public housing lease (or Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher) and stay in the unit;
- ensure that DC Housing Authority and Section 8 landlords honor a civil protection order, specifically if it addresses the batterer's access to where the survivor lives;
- Port (move to another location) if s/he has a Section 8 voucher, so long as it's within the DC Housing Authority jurisdiction;
- seek an emergency transfer;
- stay in the unit, even if there is (or has been) criminal activity that is directly related to the domestic violence; and
- confidentiality of information about domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, or stalking. This information can only be shared if requested by the survivor in writing, is required for use in an eviction proceeding or by law.

¹ Protections also extend to: Section 202 Supportive Housing for the Elderly (Excludes Section 202 Direct Loan Projects without project-based Section 8 assistance), § 236 Multifamily rental housing, HOPWA Section 811 Supportive Housing for People with Disabilities, § 221d3 BMIR (Excludes 221(d)(3) and (d)(5) BMIR projects refinancing under 223(a)(7) or 223(f) where interest rates not determined under 221(d)(5)), HOME, Housing Trust Fund, , Emergency Solutions Grant, Rural Housing Stability Assistance program.

Fair Housing Act

The Fair Housing Act protects survivors from discrimination in private and public housing.

Survivors have the right to:

- be protected from discrimination when seeking housing to buy or rent;
- be protected from eviction; and
- be treated the same as other tenants by a landlord, even though they are domestic violence survivors. For example, a landlord cannot impose additional rules on a person just because they are or have been a survivor.

Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act

Housing providers that receive federal funding are also prohibited from discrimination under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act. This includes discrimination based on race, color, national origin, and other areas.

Americans with Disabilities Act

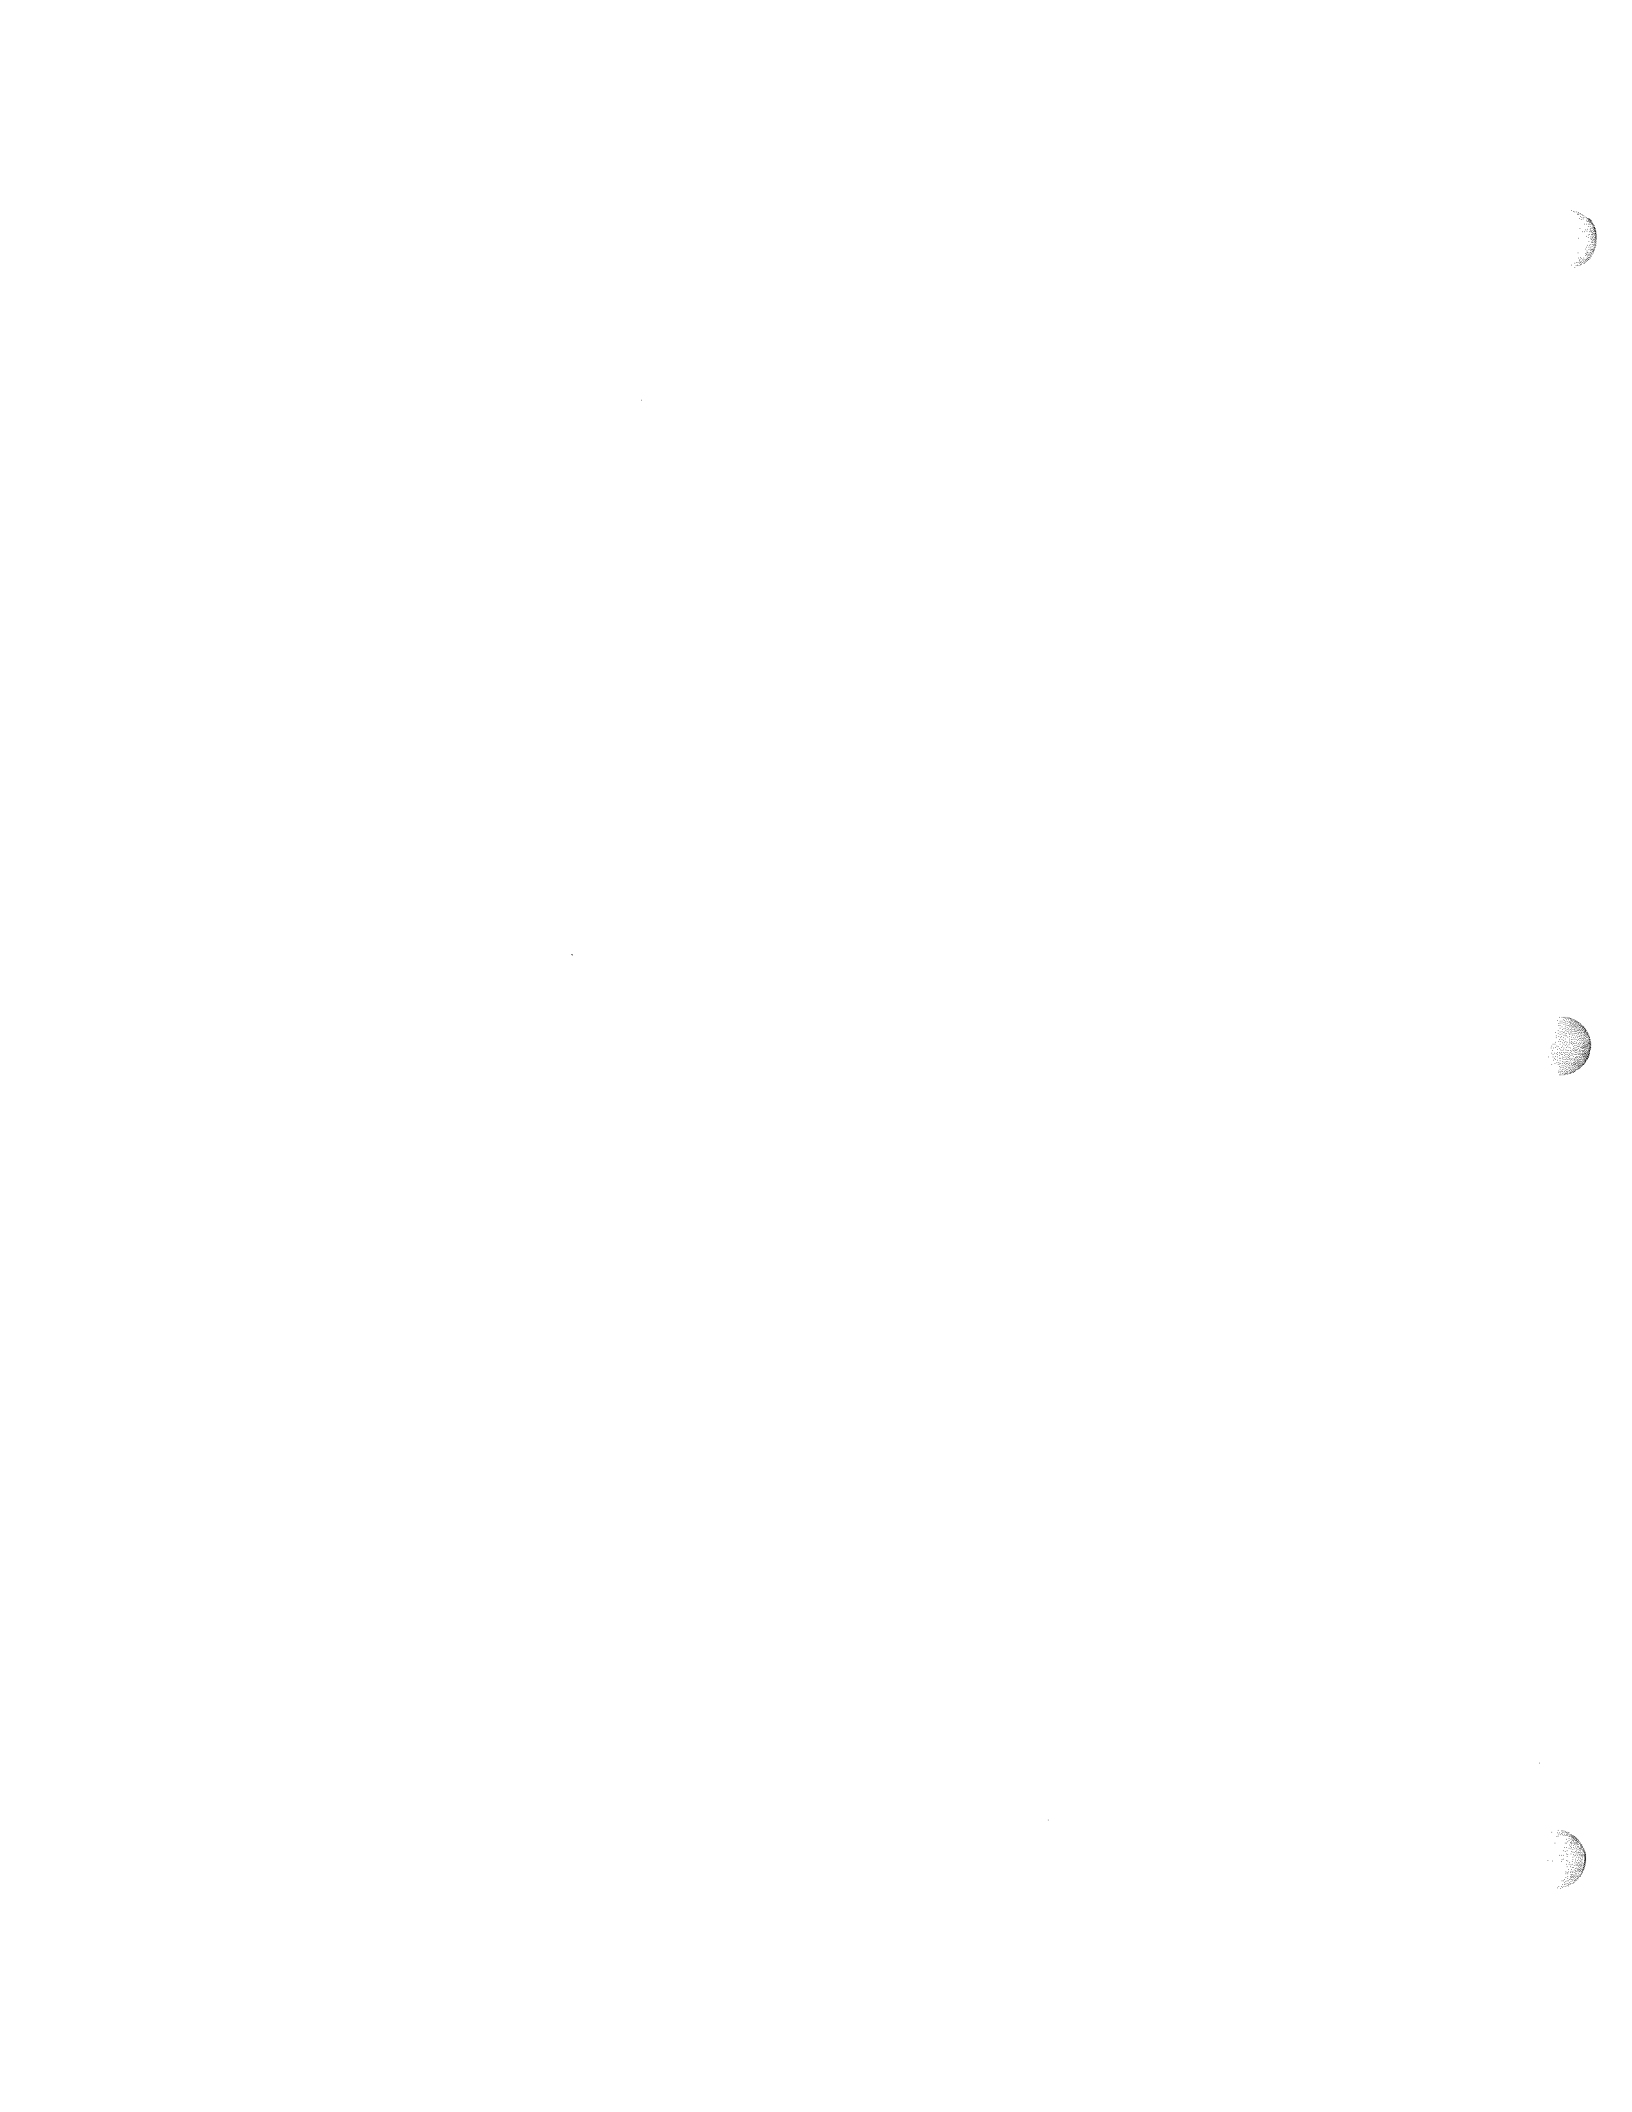

Survivors with a disability are entitled to protections under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). This Act prohibits discrimination against individuals with disabilities in public accommodations. The ADA applies to all shelters operated by the government and to private shelters.

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act prohibits discrimination against survivors with disabilities by housing providers that receive federal funding.

Survivors with a disability have the right to:

- be protected from discrimination. For example, if a survivor of domestic violence is deaf or hard of hearing, the provider should find ways to make sure the survivor receives the services and support s/he needs;
- confidentiality; and
- reasonable accommodations, if the domestic violence survivor lets someone in the program know about her/his disability. For example, allowing a guide dog to stay with a program participant.

What Can Be Done: Questions and Answers

Q. As an advocate, how can I help survivors protect their rights?

A. If you think a survivor is being discriminated against (like in the scenarios in this Toolkit) you can help by providing them with resource information. Remember: you are not an attorney. Your role is to provide all of the information you have to help survivors advocate for themselves or get assistance from the government or a legal provider.

Q. What are the survivor's options for help?

A. Some of the options available include:

- talking to the landlord or housing provider about the concerns;
- sending the landlord or housing provider a letter (samples included in Toolkit);
- reaching out for support from a community resource or legal service organization;
- filing a complaint with a government agency to help resolve the problem;
- taking the landlord or housing provider to court.

Q: What if the survivor's landlord or housing provider doesn't understand their problem?

A. The survivor can contact one of the government agencies listed in this Toolkit to file a complaint and/or seek support from a community resource or legal service organization.

Q: What if the survivor doesn't feel comfortable going directly to the housing provider or landlord?

A. They can contact a government agency or organization listed in the resource page for help.

Q: Can a survivor ask for help from more than one place at a time?

A. Yes. They can send a letter to their housing provider or landlord and reach out to a legal service organization or the government at the same time.

Q. Is the process to get help going to take a long time?

A. It depends. Sometimes a letter to a landlord or housing provider works right away and the problem is resolved. If a survivor seeks help from a government agency, it usually takes longer but results can be achieved. A survivor may want to send a letter to his/her landlord and at the same time reach out to the government agency to complain. If the letter doesn't work, he/she has already started the process with the government.

Q. What if survivor gets evicted or kicked out of the shelter (or evicted) while they're waiting for the government to investigate? Can they get their housing back?

A. Maybe. Once a survivor files a complaint with the government agency, they begin a process to figure out what happened and what should be done. Sometimes, as a result, the survivor gets an apartment or housing unit again. Sometimes, once the landlord or housing provider is notified, they fix the problem on their own.

In the next few pages, you'll find a list of government organizations that can help survivors along with samples letters they can use. Use the tables on this page to help survivors quickly find what they need.
