Since Pepco no longer generates electricity, what options do customers have in selecting an electricity supplier? Will the merger with Exelon change how people get their electricity or the choices they will have?

Will Pepco continue to support the Community Renewables initiative and the District's sustainability plan generally? Will the merger with Exelon change this? Why not?

What changes, if any, should customers with rooftop solar arrays expect from the merger?

Can you send in a word document or just cut and paste the 3 questions into an email? (we'd like to provide to CM Evans in his preferred font size).

Thanks!

Good Morning,

The Committee on Business, Consumer, and Regulatory Affairs will hold a public roundtable tomorrow, Thursday, January 29, 2015 at 9 a.m. in Room 500 of the John A. Wilson Building, 1350 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20004. The purpose of the public roundtable is to review the new jurisdiction of the Committee, as well as review the delivery of services by public utilities to the residents of the District of Columbia, including ~~RECORD ID: 0001806~~ grounding of power lines, the Pepco/Exelon merger, and the implementation of the Accelerated Pipeline Replacement Plan.

Furthermore, the Committee intends to review the working relationship between the Office of Cable Television, the Public Access Corporation, and the Office of Motion Picture and Television Development to attract cable, motion pictures, television programs, and music productions to the District of Columbia.

Attached are copies of the hearing notice and draft agenda and witness list. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Thanks,

Peter F. Johnson, Director
Committee on Business, Consumer and Regulatory Affairs
